This essay will discuss alternative nationalism or ethnicity of Chinese Overseas between modernity and the ethno-genetic explanation. Officially or formally, it could be understood in its modern national context. However, we can find that their views on bone and blood are providing a scheme for their nationalism and ethnicity. This essay focuses on ethno-genetic discourses on bone, blood, and body among the ethnic Chinese in the Philippines, and discusses how we can formulate the Chinese nationalism and ethnicity as well as “Chinese Diaspora”.
